wholesale catalog 2024

new year's greetings!

As we enter into our 35th year of business as papermakers and letterpress printers, we will be returning to our roots by designing and developing distinctively handmade paper products. In turn, some of our best selling products will be retiring - particularly those that have been produced on machine-made paper for many years.

These products include a majority of our Thank You notes, as well as popular lines like the English Literature cards, and many other occasional items.

You can still purchase all of the products listed in this section at a discount until inventory is no longer available.

We remain committed to hand making fine cotton paper every day. Our pulp is produced from recycled remnants of the garment industry using wind power before being turned into cards and letterpress printed with vegetable based inks for environment sustainability - all of which is handcrafted in-house.

Look for opportunities to stock your shelves with discounted fine printed products as we craft new handmade paper cards, journals, invitations and more for your writing pleasure.

a peek into the history of the urban paper mill

It is not difficult to understand why most alchemists view the making of paper to be chief among practices of their mystical arts; papermaking apprentices were often locked in cells at the end of a hard day's work to keep secret the delicate processes of an individual mill.

For hundreds of years, discarded rags and garments have been beaten and macerated, bleached and dyed, then suspended in vats of water, naturally containing lime from nearby mineral rich aquifers. Semioticians can scarcely articulate the wonder found in these freshly formed, wet sheets of paper drawn from these self-same vats of cotton pulp.

We are about the business of forming sheets in the same manner, and have been doing so for a quarter century.

our paper

We uphold time-honored traditional practices to make our paper daily by hand in our Portland studio. Vegan sizing is added to each batch of pulp to optimize surface pigment retention and moisture absorption.

The cotton fiber is recycled remnant material from the garment industry, and our urban hand-papermaking mill is run using wind power generated in the hills of the Columbia River Basin.

Note: due to the natural handmade quality, paper may vary slightly in size, thickness, color and texture.

letterpress print shop

Letterpress printing presses are heavy, black, oily, and made of cast iron. Apprentices of traditional tradesman - also known as printer's devils - would learn the craft by hand-setting lead type from job cases and galleys into steel chases. Jobs would be printed, the shop would be swept, and the inky type cleaned with kerosene then redistributed for work in the morrow.

While employing the same tools, daily work in our shop involves the use of vegetable ink, natural citrus solvents, and flexible polymer plates printed on sheets of paper that are still fed one at a time into mechanical platen presses.

The Hat+Wig+Glove Company punctuates life's little occasions with carefully disguised greetings well-suited for people with short attention spans.

Hat+Wig+Glove fans don't believe in using straws, eat sushi with forks, and are fond of Fauvism (the early period, not the late). As was said of the movement's inspirational founder, Gustave Moreau, "He did not set us on the right roads, but off the roads."

There is something here to mildly offend almost everyone you know. Please support our endeavors to make social mischief out of all those awkward and necessary lines of demarcation imposed upon us by authorities of etiquette and decorum.

our green approach

We have always been attracted to the benefits and practicality of recycling. In fact, our business has its roots in taking unwanted fibers, converting them back into pulp, and making it into fresh, new paper.

Over twenty years after our craft beginnings, we are still making paper and following recycling principles. The fiber source for our handmade paper is 100% acid-free cotton recovered from the garment industry. We supply envelopes made from 100% post-consumer waste. We use wind energy to run our business. All of our letterpress pieces are printed with vegetable inks and citrus solvents on antique presses.

This business was founded on practicing a green approach, thank you for supporting our enthusiasm for conservation and recycling.

custom orders

We produce work by antique letterpress, a historic method of printing that uses raised type and images. The text and images are made into plates which are physically pressed into the paper, leaving a distinctive and elegant impression in the surface of each piece. During printing, paper is hand fed one sheet at a time into cast iron platen presses. Some of the presses in our letterpress studio have been operating for over 100 years!

Our process begins with original templates that we carefully tailor to your occasion. For each order our team designs, typesets, and creates individual plates on location. We print with soy based inks and hot foil, and finish every piece by hand.

We are excited to work with you if you have your own design idea or are choosing from one of our templates. Each component of our templates can be customized: paper type, ink colors, typeface, layout, etc. We pride ourselves on personal service and attention to detail, and look forward to helping make your vision a reality.
